

Nikolas Dickerson

University of Lincoln – the UK

Nik Dickerson is a senior lecturer in sport sociology at the University of Lincoln. He got his PhD in the Cultural Studies of Sport from the University of Iowa, USA. His research interests revolve around the representations of Black masculinity and national identity within sport and other forms of popular culture. His published work has examined these themes within internet memes, documentaries, and the printed press. His current work focuses on representations of Black masculinity and recreational drug use in sport, film, music, and television. In his spare time, he likes to play ice hockey, read, do yoga, and skateboard.

My Topics for the 19th International Teaching Week:

- 1) Black Masculinity, National Identity and American Sport
- 2) Recreational Drug Use in Sport